

On new music release:

I like to call this latest music release a hearty advertiser rather than an album. I wanted to give my listeners and those supporting my music something with depth and quality to show how I've evolved over the years as an artist and songwriter; and to hopefully anticipate the album coming in the future. It is indeed free to stream at the moment on soundcloud. I believe launching on soundbloud was a smart move, hoping it will give the songs a chance to fly a little before heading to the next step.

On living and working in Nashville, TN:

Nashville is known for its rich heritage in country music, but today it's progressed into this new LA-New York City type of vibe. So many musicians have moved here because of the music industry's growth. The culture here is also very innovative and the energy is young. However the downside is it's quite competitive and you have to really figure out how to distinguish your sound from the crowd and make it work for you.

On Bowdoin:

Going to Bowdoin was like a re-birthing process for me in so many ways. The mentorship I received over the four years and the many activities I was involved with, helped me build my confidence and character to pursue what many considered impossible. My Bowdoin experience helped me dig deeper, to keep learning, and to keep challenging myself.
